Contrast variation in dynamic MR angiography: intermediate peak enhancement and peak fill of parenchymal enhancement at dynamic T1-weighted MR angiography. To analyze contrast enhancement during magnetic resonance (MR) arteriography and dynamic computed tomography (CT) in the presence and absence of prior administration of gadolinium. Seventy-three segments of the abdominal aorta and renal arteries were imaged in 25 subjects (12 men and 13 women) by using spin-echo (SE) MR and dynamic CT imaging. Three groups were included in the study: group 1, after an initial bolus of gadopentetate dimeglumine (0.1 mmol/kg), a second group without prior administration, and a third group with prior administration. All arterial segments were evaluated for peak enhancement and average enhancement. The mean peak enhancement on MR angiography ranged from 59% to 81%, and average enhancement was 64.5% to 81.6%. Both parameters were significantly greater than the average enhancement (54% to 71%) of the post gadolinium group on dynamic CT ($P = .001$). The range and average enhancement of the second group without prior administration was 32% to 57%, and average enhancement was 55% to 77%, not significantly different from that of the post gadolinium group. However, the third group with prior administration had significantly less enhancement (19% to 49%) than the post gadolinium group and the second group without prior administration ($P = .001$). Contrast enhancement in dynamic MR arteriography ranges between 59% and 81%, averaging 64.5%. These values are significantly greater than values obtained with dynamic CT, and in the presence of intravenous gadolinium, the difference becomes even greater. Prior administration of gadolinium may have a suppressive effect on contrast enhancement during dynamic MR arteriography.

Phosphorylation and dephosphorylation of proteins in Candida utilis yeast cells during ethanol production. Proteins and their phosphorylated forms present in Candida utilis yeast cells during fermentation of glucose to ethanol by means of the phosphoenolpyruvate-dependent phosphotransferase system were analysed. The majority of the protein was present as the non-phosphorylated form, with only some of the phosphorylated forms having a turnover that could be estimated. These non-phosphorylated proteins probably represent bound enzymes or regulatory proteins associated with cytoskeletal structures that are associated

From the first sparks emerging from Robert 'T.A.' McCollum's 1982 explosion on stage, a geyser of talent welled up like the womb-lake of a volcanic vulva. Never had a band so preoccupied, so haunted by the past — whether it be Jimi Hendrix's or post-soul's — so vividly obvious in the present. You Get What You Give, their first and only album, bore testimony to a hidden-relic of the '70s, which had been best forgotten but, retrospectively, the album was much like slipping your clothes on, straight from the laundry-bag they'd been stored in for ages. The angry, in-hurt howl of Bobby 'Blue' Bland at 3.13 seconds in 'Planet of Sound' was a transparent, yet conclusive, mark of Brand New Heavies' lineage: "get out your paintbox / let's paint another picture!" The out-take 'You Get What You Give' samples James Brown's 'The Payback', 'Future Funk', and Kraftwerk's 'Wir Sind Helden'. The album was subtitled 'The Revolution will be Obsolete', a
